THE RIME-VOWELS OF CURSOR MUNDI

A PHONOLOGICAL AND ETYMOLOGICAL INVESTIGATION

INAUGURAL DISSERTATION

Preface.

The idea of investigating the language in the Middle English poem Cursor Mundi was suggested to me by a remark of the late Professor BJÖRKMAN in one of his lectures dealing with this poem. He pointed out that this old and extensive literary product would be worth investigating, as there had been no comprehensive study of this work of late. In order to obtain definite ideas as to the original forms in the language of the anonymous author it was necessary to begin by a systematic study of the rimes, and especially the rime-vowels, from a phonological point of view and by getting as complete a collection as possible of the rime-material. The whole material is, for practical reasons, arranged in small groups according to the origin of the different rime-words, so as to enable the reader to survey the extensive collection. The arrangement is almost tabular, the rime-words being given alphabetically in each paragraph, thus facilitating the search for any special word.

I should like to state as a general principle that special investigations, limited as far as possible in their sphere and offering exhaustive materials, must precede works dealing with general subjects. In the latter class of works the literary documents are usually treated in a very summary manner and sometimes the investigator gives a wrong rendering of some passage owing to the absence of a specific investigation of the text in question. Such mistakes have been very frequent in the treatment of the language of Cursor Mundi and have been pointed out in the present work as often as I have detected them. In several cases they have contributed to produce incorrect results. Frequently, however, such works dealing with general questions are quite indispensable even for a study with a very limited scope, as they may illustrate a question in a more comprehensive manner and, by comparison and combination, quite unexpected results may be attained, which would not have obtained a proper elucidation by internal inquiry alone.

To Docent ARVID GABRIELSON, my present teacher in English philology, I beg to take this opportunity of proffering my sincerest thanks for the kindly encouragement he has given me during the course of my English studies.

I am indebted above all to my former teacher, Professor ERIK BJÖRKMAN, whose tragic and untimely death a few days ago is still poignantly regretted by us all. His sympathetic kindness and keen interest in my English studies was of great assistance to me in carrying out my work. It is with a feeling of profound sadness that I realize the impossibility of tendering him, my real teacher, these thanks. As a scholar, teacher and man he has left a deep impression upon me and will for ever remain a brilliant example. The stimulus that emanated from his bright and many-sided personality, which was characterized above all by sound common sense, was invaluable. His memory will for ever remain a precious possession to his friends and pupils.

For assistance in the revision of the English in my treatise I am indebted to Mr HENRY ALEXANDER, lector in English at this University. Finally my thanks are due to all those friends of mine who have helped me in revising the proof-sheets of this thesis.

$\bar{e}$, $\bar{o}$, denote long, close e , o .

$\bar{e}$, $\bar{o}$, denote long and short vowels.

$\hat{a}$, $\hat{e}$, $\hat{o}$, denote a , e , o lengthened in open syllables.

$\acute{a}$, $\acute{o}$, etc. denote vowels lengthened in OE before certain consonant groups and denote OSc long vowels.

χ denotes the sound ch (in Scotch loch).

Introduction.

The Cursor Mundi is the oldest and most voluminous literary monument of Northern England. It was composed just before 1300 in a dialect which, according to MURRAY (see MURRAY, The Dialect of the southern counties of Scotland p. 30), was that of a district not far from Durham. Dr. HUPE (see EETS 101, p. 186), on the other hand, suggests the north of Lincolnshire. Any idea of a Lincolnshire dialect must, however, be dismissed, because the rimes of the North Lincolnshire writer Roberd Mannyng of Brunne do not agree at all with the rimes of the Cursor Mundi, which must represent a pure Northern dialect. The rimes of our poem often correspond with those of early Scottish writers, and the vocabulary has much in common with Scottish. Several words are recorded only in our poem and Scottish authors; see CURT BARTH: Der Wortschatz des Cursor Mundi, p. 19, where he says: «Wir dürfen daraus schliessen (from these words peculiar to Scottish), dass das Original des Cursor Mundi in nächster Nähe von Schottland, also etwa im Norden der Grafschaft Durham entstanden sein muss» and p. 50: «Murray ist durchaus im Rechte, wenn er den Cursor Mundi in Durham entstanden sein lässt. Wörter wie siquar, ithen, sank etc., denen wir sonst nur in den schottischen Denkmälern begegnen, weisen deutlich auf den äussersten Norden Englands hin.» In the course of the present investigation I have found further correspondences with Scottish (such as lame sb.², eri adj. etc.) and I should like to assume, like KALUZA, that the original was written in Scotland, if it were not for a passage (ll. 232—236) that seems to speak against this: «Þis ilk bok it es translate In to Inglis tong to rede For the loue of Inglis lede, Inglis lede of Ingland», e. g.

this book is translated for the English in England»; see BARTH p. 10. But since Barth wants to place the poem as near as possible to the Scottish border, why not in the county of Northumberland, which lies between Scotland and Durham? In order to settle the question as to the original home of the poem it would be necessary to investigate the rimes of the earliest Scottish writers and compare these with the results derived from an examination of the rimes in Cursor Mundi.

The present rime-investigation comprises ll. 1—24968, as, in the opinion of Dr. HUPE Introduction V. 219, the poem probably ends there. The following rime-lists are based on MSS. CEF, critically compared with each other, and are founded on the text-variants best suiting the rimes; they claim to offer a complete rime-material. In some cases the text has been compared with its sources (The Vulgate, etc.), and this has sometimes made it possible to ascertain the original form used by the author when it has been corrupted by later scribes. I have only occasionally discussed some interesting scribal errors in the MSS. and especially in MS. C, as these questions do not really come within the scope of this investigation. The forms and spellings given are chiefly those of MS. C, and MSS. CE from line 18989. Peculiarities and mistakes in MS. C are specially pointed out and the more correct forms given in addition or substituted. In a few cases textual emendations had to be made.

The rimes of the Cursor Mundi have been dealt with before by Dr. HUPE, but his examination of them dates from 1889 and scarcely satisfies the demands of modern scholarship. I do not enter here upon any criticism of his inquiry, as this would be too extensive a task. Apart from this there exist only two small investigations dealing with the language of Cursor Mundi: CURT BARTH, Der Wortschatz des Cursor Mundi and WILLY HÖRNING, Die Schreibung der Hs. E des Cursor Mundi.

The etymologies given within square brackets generally originate from NED, except for the letters S—Z, for which the Century Dictionary has been chiefly consulted. In a few cases I have ventured to propose new etymologies, which are collected and discussed in a special Etymological Section at the end of the book.

When the rimes enable us to draw any conclusions as to the pronunciation of a vowel these conclusions are placed, for practical reasons, immediately below the rime-group concerned; only in a few cases have the results been summarized. In many cases it has been expressly pointed out that the rimes can very well be explained in more than one way.

All the rimes that are probably incorrect are printed in small type as Notes. On account of the comparatively small number of incorrect rimes, we must state that the author of Cursor Mundi was a fairly good rimer. It is noteworthy that in some cases, e. g. dēl sb. and dēl v., rēd = 'read, tell' and rēd = 'advice' he makes strikingly regular distinctions. Sometimes, especially in the cases of words containing some variety of o-sound, emergency rimes occur, owing to the scarcity of quite suitable and correct rime-words in his native dialect.

The arrangement adopted, which is designed to avoid the necessity of giving each rime more than once and to afford a comprehensive view of the words riming with the different vowels, is also intended to make up for the absence of a rime-index.

The verb pas(s) in the above-mentioned instances has the meaning of «to pass» and, as the rimes show, it contains a short a. As a noun with the meaning of «passage» and «pace» the a is long; cfr § 116. This difference in the vowel-quantity of the noun and the verb is to be connected with the French stress, which in most forms of the verb lies on the ending, whereas the a of the noun is always stressed.

This modification of a to an e-sound is mentioned by MORSE. p. 119 and is considered by him a sort of s-umlaut. In the adj. fest e may be due to the influence of the verb festan. The existence of the form kest is proved by these rimes in the preterite alone. The infinitive and past participle are always represented by forms with a (see §§ 20, 21), at least in the rimes. The other words mostly occur with a-forms. The verb kast seems to have passed into the class of reduplicated verbs, such as wass inf., wess pt. and wax inf., wex pt.

With regard to the word prophetess the rimes recorded by REITEMEYER always prove a short e in feminine nouns ending in -ess, e. g. emperesse, lyoness, ostess, prioress, and such words are never found riming with words with æ.

mell s. [OFr mail pronounced maɲ, i. e. with l mouillé or palatalized] = hammer : fell adj. [OE fel] 23239. This is an interesting rime, as it shows the quality of the vowel a in the northern dialects compared with the more palatalized sound of a in more southern regions, where this OFr word mail < Lat. malleum was represented by mall. Thus the palatalized OFr a was rendered in the south by a, but in the north by e. That proves that the southern a was more or less «fronted» and the northern a a more back vowel. This difference of sounds is still extant. A mid-back-wide vowel is nowadays pronounced by dialect speakers in the northern and north-midland counties, while a low-front-wide vowel occurs in the pronunciation of educated southern people, or in southern dialects a sound that lies between these two.

The verb lest is only proved by a single rime, the common form being last; see § 21. lest is a common Scotch form; cfr. MORSB. p. 132. The vowel may also have been affected by the immediately following consonant group -st with its palatalizing influence. threst is probably to be explained as due to confusion with thrist [OSc þrýsta], pronounced with an open e; see § 93. Beside medd a form madd also occurs in rimes; see §§ 22, 23. It is to be noted that madd, medd was used as an adjective even at an early date, and the feeling of its connection with the inf. zēmædan, which soon disappeared, was lost. The palatalizing group -ss has presumably influenced fless and less.

Beside redd there also occurs the more common radd (see § 23), due to an early shortening, as the sense of connection with OSc hréda, unrecorded in ME, was very soon lost. On the whole the form redd was very rare in Middle English.

All the rimes show fledd with a short e. NED supposes that fledd may be of Scandinavian origin, from such a form as MSw flydde, although flydde is not recorded before 1350. Against such a supposition we have the fact that fledd occurs all over England even at an early date; why should it be just an old Swedish form that had this influence when the other old Scandinavian languages show other forms? As to SWEET's suggestion that there had been an identification with the verb flede = 'to flow, flood', I agree with NED in dismissing it as impossible because of the difference in sense. The most probable explanation seems to me that, when fle was inflected as a weak verb, there was an analogy from all the numerous preterites and past participles with short e + dd(e) — there was scarcely any pret. and p. p. weak form with ē + d(e).

- § 57. The adjective left = left : left pt. [of OE læfan] 2464, 21640.
 : reft pt. [of OE ræafian] 3468.

To judge from these rimes the adj. left contains e and it is never found in C. M. riming with words with i, so it cannot be derived from OE lyft. In the cognate languages there exist forms such as leeft in North. Fris., lef, laef, laf in Frisian and Dutch dialects with the sense of 'left, awkward, clumsy'. The ME form left is to be connected with these.

: step s. [OE steppe, ONorth stepe influenced by steppan] 5193, 19078.

Lcp pt. cannot contain ē, as is proved by these two cases in which it rimes with step, so it does not represent OE hleop pt. It is to be explained as an analogical formation, as stated by EDD. Compare bett pt. of bēt inf., thrett pt. of thrēt inf., shedd of shēd a. s. o.

The long OE vowel in hēhþo was shortened somewhat late before the consonant group -hþ (or -ht from the 13th century) the adj. hēh had, of course, a conserving influence, and the result of this late shortening was a close e, very similar in sound to i. Cfr. LUICK, Stud. p. 196. Hight was the typical northern form and height the southern; see NED.

The rimes show that i had an open sound very near to e, especially in combinations with r. With regard to the rime-words to dide, it is to be noted that drede pt. always and sted s. nearly always (except only in some uncertain cases with ē) contain a short e in the rimes of C. M. The rime did : stid (sted) can also be based on the ONorth. form styd (see SIEV. p. 137) and in this way be interpreted as a quite correct rime i : i.

bla adj. [OSc blá(r)] (especially) = 'livid by contusion', here used as a sb. = lividness : wa s. 6704. KALUZA wrongly translates bla with «blow» = stroke. Blow is, however, not recorded before 1460 and, moreover, never occurs in the form bla. The principal reason for my assuming the meaning : 'livid, lividness' is the agreement with the corresponding passage in the Vulgate, Ex. XXI, 23—25, which runs: «Sin autem mors eius fuerit subsecuta, reddet animam pro anima, oculum pro oculo, dentem pro dente, manum pro manu, pedem pro pede, adustionem pro adustione, vulnus pro vulnere, livorem pro livore» (compared with the rendering in MS. C of C. M. ll. 6699—6704: «And if sco dei þar for þe wijf, He sal þan ʒeild lijf for lijf, Ei for ei, and toth for toht, Hand for hand, lok þis be soth, Fote for fote and bla for bla, Wond for wond and wa for wa»). Wicliff, indeed, translates this biblical passage with : blones for bloness.

: hatt [OE hätte = is called] 10545.

All the above words have short a and consequently show that the lengthening of a before k and t is facultative. With this assumption the following rimes may be accounted for:
gatt s. [OSc gata]: hatt [OE hätte = is called] 12815.

: yatt pt. (< yätte pt. of OE 3eātan + OSc játa) 8806.

These two rimes prove that gatt s. contains a short a. LUICK, Unters. p. 239, considers that this short a in gate is due to the influence of the short a in yatt s. [OE 3æt]. But such an explanation seems very improbable.

: Caiphas, pas s. (= pace), Iudas, C lazas FGT las [OFr < las, laz] = lace, allas 15876. lazas in MS. C is a curious scribal error for las. Some early manuscript had the spelling laz, adopted from the OFr laz, a parallel form to las > ME las = 'lace'; a copyist then misinterpreted the letter z as 3, a mistake very easily made, because these two letters were very much alike, especially in northern texts, and consequently often confused; see LUICK Hist. Gram § 61. The reading laz, however, gave no rime, and therefore-as was added to obtain a good eye-rime in closer conformity with the other riming words.

The lengthening of a vowel in an unstressed position when the ictus of the metre falls upon it is dealt with in § 107.

The form maidan s. [OE mæȝden] in the rimes given below may come into this group in those cases when its final syllable has full stress for metrical reasons. The ending -en was probably pronounced in common speech with an æ-sound with some a-timbre in it due to the preceding -ai-. When this ending -æn was fully stressed because of the metre, this indistinct sound came very near to an a. It is to be noted that maidan is never recorded with an e-rime.

§ 126. The sb. C byyate F bezate G bizate: state s. This rime points to a long $\bar{a}$ in byyate s. I assume a ground-form ONorth. bezeāt(e)*, a parallel form to OE bezeāt(e), Orm's bizæte, which is represented also in C. M. by the form F bizete C biyett; see § 305. These two forms in OE go back to WGerm. *-zāt- > Prim. OE -zæt-, and, according to LUICK Hist. Gr. § 197, ONorth. æ < WGerm. ā, which sometimes occurs by the side of the more common æ (cfr. drædan in § 171, rædan in § 171, mæþ s. in § 309), becomes ēa and by shifting of stress occasioned by ȝ, as is frequently the case, a form eā is than developed.

- § 127. The sb. outrake s. = 'excess': bisuak pt. [OE -stæwē 9578.
: wrake s. 4134, 6296. NED says about this sb. outrake: «corruption of outrage» In this case I should explain the form as having arisen by popular etymology, the OFr outrage = 'excess' being analysed as from ut + rage, which, indeed, occurred, see NED s. v. outrage, and rage being in this dialect associated with and replaced by the native word rake s. = 'run, rush'.
- § 128. The sb. siquar(e) = time : ar adv. [OSc ár] 10904, 11199, 12148, 12302, 22190.

Judging by these numerous rimes there seems to be a long ā in siquar s. As a possible OE ground-form I assume a form siþhw(e)arf*; for the further discussion of this form see the Etym. Section. The second part of siþhw(e)arf* gradually became weak-stressed when one of the three consonants was lost owing to difficulties of pronunciation. Its weak-stressed ME a became long when metrically stressed.

§ 134. OSc á + ld : OAngl. á + ld.
scald s. [OSc skáld] : bald adj. 22030.

This word scald is not an adjective, as KALUZA (and EILERS p. 8) consider it to be, but a noun, originating from the OSc skáld; see NED. The adjective scald had, at this time, the form scalled, just as bald appeared as balled F 3490. The oldest example of scald adj. is 1500.

Summary: cald pt., p. p. certainly had a short a and the weak-stressed auxiliary wald pt. presumably had a short a, cfr. the form wolld in Orm. EILERS does not come to any definite conclusions about the other words. But it seems to me that the rimes in § 131 prove a short a at least in the case of hald inf., and probably in tald pt., p. p. as well. With regard to hald inf. it is proved to have a short a in such a careful rimer as Richard Rolle, who also wrote in a northern dialect, and in Roberd of Brunne as well. The quantity of the a in the other words is more doubtful.

The words riming with the OFr loanwords all have short a. The following words seem to contain long a : aand s., faand s., faand v., waand v. and perhaps saand s., because they are only rimed with each other or with weak-stressed -and, an ending which can be lengthened in the metre, but they are never combined with OFr loanwords.

§ 143. OSc a + ng in self-rime.
stang s. [OSc stong] : wrang 21144.

§ 144. a + ng : a + nd.

lang adv. : CG land s. 2492 (ass.). F has the common pleonastic phrase I understand for the sake of the rime.

strang adj. : CF land s. 2396 (ass.) G has the reading I understand.

thrang s. : hingand pr. p. F land 13705 (ass.).

It has already been proved in § 137 that a in land s. is short, and the first two assonances accordingly point to a short a in lang adv. and strang adj. The third assonance is more uncertain, as the ending -and of the present participle can be weak-stressed and therefore acquire a long a when metrically stressed. Probably in other cases of a + ng there existed a shortened a, although this is not shown by assonances. We must, however, bear in mind that assonances were of course avoided as much as possible by a careful rimer. EILERS mentions these assonances in a note on pp. 18, 19, where he says that the rimes are incorrect and that the other MSS give no information how to emend the first two examples. In dealing with the -ang-rimes he does not pay any attention to these assonances. Consequently he is unable to draw any conclusion merely from the ang-rimes.

§ 148. OFr a + rd: OFr a + rt.

bastard: C partd s. [OFr part] 3027 (ass.).

Short a is proved at least in the cases where assonances with OFr a + rt occur.

-rn.

§ 149. OE á + rn riming with itself.

barn s.: warn s. 11133.

: warn inf. pr. 2564, 2627, 2725, 3040, 3261,

§ 150 OE a + rn : OSc a + rn.

barn s. : EG þarn inf. [OSc þarna, þarfna] 24591.

This case is omitted by EILERS, who only gives rimes occurring in MS. C. In this passage, however, C has the incorrect reading warn instead of þarn.

§ 151. OE a + rn : a + rn syncopated.

barn s. : forfarn p. p. 1231, 6693, 8607, 11557, 20050.

warn inf. : farn p. p. 11911.

§ 152. The pret. pl. warn [OE wāron* or OSc vāru] : a + rn syncopated.

warn pt. pl. : forfarn p. p. 4759.

EILERS says, p. 40, that short a is established in barn s. and warn inf. by the rimes with the syncopated p. p. forfarn and farn. But these p. ps. may quite as well contain a long a if they had been syncopated after the lengthening of a in open syllables : OE forfaren > forfāren > forfārn : see MORSE, pp. 103, 106. The last rime with warn pt. may indicate an ā-rime, but it is just as probable that warn pt. may be weak-stressed and thus obtain a short a, as in the case of wern, wer, the latter of which is sometimes found with weak stress; see § 246. We cannot state any certain results. It is, however, to be noted that þarn inf. is recorded in Orrm. with the spelling þarnneun alone.

I consider the rime C godd him forbedd, F god him forbede, G that god him forbedd: C lede, F lede, G ledd [< læode] 8994 as a rime containing $\bar{e}$: $\bar{e}$. Forbede is the pres. subj.form. The spelling forbedd is misleading and the parenthetical expression God him forbede ought to have been put within commas in the text.

The word he in the Cotton text is probably incorrect and ought to be changed into him and brought into conformity with the reading of the Fairfax MS. The Gött. and Tr. The rime ded adj. : CG wede inf. [OE wēdan < wōdjan*] 12039 perhaps belongs here, but F has dede : rede s. with long open ē.

§ 175. OE $\bar{a}^1(h)$ OE $\bar{a}^2$.

Perhaps the rimes ded adj.: fled p. p. [of OE fleon] 1174, ded adj.: CG shedd p. p. 4152, are not incorrect: fled with short e p. p. is established by a great many rimes; see § 56. The shortening of the vowel in ded adj. is perhaps due to the fact that the adjective was mistaken for a past participle and so obtained by analogy the usual short vowel of this tense; cfr. fled. It should also be observed that the adjective alone, and not the substantive, is found with short e. This short e has been found as early as in Roberd Mannyng in the first half of the fourteenth century (cfr. OSKAR BOERNER, Festschrift für Morsbach, p. 317). He says: »So sehe ich in unserm Reim das erste Beispiel für das gekürzte ded.» But the above examples are earlier, since Cursor Mundi was composed before 1300.

Conclusion: drede in all its significations has mostly $\bar{e}$. The same applies to wede = 'clothes'. Red = 'counsel', 'help' and as a verb = 'advise', 'save', on the other hand, must have had open $\bar{e}$, to judge by the great number of rimes with $\bar{e}$. The infinitive shede with $\bar{e}$, judging from the rime in § 173, cannot be explained from the inflected forms of the present tense scēdas with i-mutation, because OE $\bar{a}^1 + d$ is always represented by $\bar{e}$ in this dialect, cfr. § 167. It should be noted, too, that Orm. has shædenn and not shedenn like ledenn. NED is right, therefore, in assuming this explanation of the open vowel. The ground-form is an OE form with a falling diphthong instead of an original rising diphthong. With regard to the p. p. shede, this form originates from an OE form scēaden, also with a falling diphthong. NED puts a sign of interrogation after this p. p., but no doubt it existed, as this rime seems to show. Moreover, it should have been the p. p. corresponding to the present tense scēadan, since the verb was a reduplicated one.

The rime rede = rule : spede, lede ($\bar{e}^1$), bede (bēodan) 15432 is incorrect. rede = 'rule, counsel' has $\bar{e}$, as shown above. It only occurs in C, the line is missing in the other MSS.

The first rimes with bed(d) = 'prayer' might be taken as $\bar{e}$ -rimes, stēd < OE stede : bēd < OE ʒebed n. in oblique cases, as is often the case with neuters, or else it possibly represents OE bedu. All the other rimes, however, prove a short e in stedd and then short e is also probably present in bed = 'prayer'. The origin of this form stedd with short e is to be seen in ONorth., where, according to SIEVERS § 263 Note 5, shortened forms of the masculine i-stems without final -e appear as a rule, e. g. styd instead of styde, met(t) instead of mete (represented by met with short e in C. M.; see § 31). The ordinary OE form stede s. should accordingly have been represented in ONorth. by the short form sted.

: smeke s. [OAngl. smēc] 1643.

: wreke s. [OAngl. wrēc] 2928, 22603

To judge from these five rimes, speke inf. seems to have ē̄. According to MORSBACH Mittelengl. Gr. p. 146 ê is sometimes rimed with ē̄ in the northern dialects, and this is to be expected, because the short e is often rimed with i and so seems to be close or half-close. This lengthened ê ought therefore to be a half-open ē̄-sound.

reke inf. : weke adj. = weak 24452.

This rime proves that BJÖRKMAN's assumption as to the origin of weke adj. in C. M. is right. The co-existence of the OSc loan-word waik in the MSS. is shown by such spellings as wayker, waike, waikest. week 23624 is = week, but not = weik, as BJÖRKMAN supposes as an alternative, Scand. Loanw. p. 52. It is easier to explain c as a scribal error for e than i. Moreover, OSc ei is always represented by ai in the MSS. of C. M.

Judging from the above rimes in §§ 180, 181, OE $\bar{a}^1$ before k is an open $\bar{a}$ in this dialect.

The origin of the word is, I suppose, OSc stökkva, which would regularly give steck in English. See further Etym. Sect.

Line 21942 CF fulli feld : teld p. p. is misinterpreted by EILERS as fullfild.

§ 203. OE ē : OSc ē.

teld p. p. : geld adj. [OSc geldr] 10346, 10493.

Result: OE ē + ld generally remains as ē; the only word with ē is the preterite held; beheld has both ē and ē. The OSc loanword geld has ē, to judge from the two rimes with teld p. p.

§ 206. OFr e : OFr e.

teme s. [OFr teme, Lat. tema] : Nichodeme 18495 cfr. preceding §.

This rime points to ē in teme, which is confirmed by the spelling tyme in NED : 5—6 tyme (3 examples).

§ 209. OE ēa: OSc é.

barntem: utenem [< ut + OSc ndēmr adj., see further discussion in Etym. Sect. Cfr. RICH. MOR-ceptional.

§ 210. leme s. [OE lēoma]: bem s. [OE beam] 9945, 17865.

: barnteme 18193, 22069.

: Ierusalem 11435.

leme inf. [from the sb.]: Ierusalem 8198.

To judge from these rimes leme = 'light' has open ē. NED gives the spelling leame 4, 6—7. To explain the open ē I presume an influence from the words beam, gleam [OE glæm(an) *< glaim(ian)], which have a similar meaning and were more common.

The verb tēmen is shown by the rimes in § 207 to have open ē. Orm., too, has tēmenn, and this change from OAngl.
tēman into ME tēmen is due to the influence of the noun team on the corresponding verb.

Note. The rime barn-teme s.: deme inf. 3432 is probably incorrect.

§ 226. The sb. CG geing [OSc gengi] : CG weing s. [OSc vēngr; cfr Orrm's weng] 18301.

The OSc loan-words had their vowels lengthened in OE before vowel-lengthening consonant groups; see BÜLBR. § 285, Note 2. Consequently ē is possible in geing, and the above-mentioned rime may be taken as an ē-rime. Yet geing s. is also found in the CF form ging; G has geng riming with king 6125.

§ 227. The following rimes probably contain short e.

Moreover, according to NED, no examples are recorded before 1400 in the sense 'regard with fear, awe', as opposed to the older signification 'strike with fear, terrify'.

The form er = 'are' is found especially in the northern dialects, which makes Scandinavian influence probable. As er is a word liable to become unstressed, the above rime with er may also be taken as a rime ē : ě.

These rimes are probably to be explained according to MORSB. § 111, where he says that ê (also before r) is rimed with e, especially in northern dialects.

Note. The rime langer comp. : her inf. 14534 is incorrect.

These rimes are incorrect, or else the close e in the suffix -er may be due to the influence of the OFrench suffix -er. With gospeller compare Trevisa, who has gospelour with the OFr suffix -our.

The preterites ferd, lerd and herd and the adjective fera all have a short e, as is proved by the rimes in the last two paragraphs. The two rimes in § 258 seem to indicate a short e in the sb. erd, too; if not, the rimes would be incorrect (ē:ē).
Nothing can be inferred with certainty about the sb. yerd.

§ 261. OAngl. ē + rn in self-rime.

wern pt. pl. [OAngl. wēron]: bern pt. [OAngl. bēron] 20715.

This rime is most probably an ē-rime. EILERS, p. 41, however, has a different suggestion.

§ 262. OE éa, ēa riming with the frequently weak-stressed wern pt. pl. = 'were'.

bern s. [OE béarn]: wern pt. pl. 20449.

G ern s. pl. [OE ēaran] C hern = ears: wern pt. pl. 8079.

Either short or long e is possible in these two rimes.

§ 263. OSc ia riming with wern pt. pl.

§ 264. OSc ia: OE éa + rn.

sterne s.: erne s. [OE éarn] = eagle 21313.

If the rime is correct, then it must constitute an e-rime and ern accordingly contain short e. Sterrne is the usual form in Orm., but ærn has long ē.

§ 265. OSc ia: OAngl. é + rn.

stern s.: dern adj. [OAngl. dérne] 1543, 11473.

§ 267. OE éa + rn: OAngl. é + rn.

ern s.: wern inf. 21233.

Wern inf. might possibly represent an OE wéarnian and then no conclusions can be drawn from this rime.

§ 268. The adv. gern (yern) [OE 3éorne + OSc giarna] G garn:

CG barn s. = bern [OE béarn] 11476.

The rime with barn points to short e in gern (yern) adv.

§ 269. -ern syncopated : OFr -ern.

GT bern [OE beran] F brenne : FGT lantern 12911 C has bere : lantere. EILERS does not mention this rime.

No general conclusions as to the vowel-quantity in these -ern-words can be drawn. Only in some special cases, as shown in the above §§, can possible results be obtained.

§ 270. OE eo : OE eo.

erth s. [OE éorðe] : ferth ord. [OE féorðe] 357, 13440.

EILERS p. 43, seems to have overlooked such an instructive spelling as feirth in line 9547. This may indicate a long ē in ferth = 'fourth' and the two rime-words above may consequently contain ē. No certain conclusions as to the vowel-length can be attained from these few rimes.

-ēs.

LUICK in his Untersuchungen gives another explanation of the long ē in set inf. = 'to sit'. He says nothing about the quality of this long ē, but he seems to presume that it is open, because he takes this verb sēt to originate from the substantive sēt = 'seat'. Yet the rimes all prove that sēt inf. contains a close ē. In § 300 I have shown that the subst. has an open ē. I derive sēt inf.

from the form of the present singular OE sites, which was the most frequent form of the present tense and so gradually became prevalent throughout the present tense, as was the case with the verbs h, sai, bī and others.

The rimes can also be interpreted as i : i.

§ 305. The sb. F be-zete G bizeitt C biyett s. : gret adj. 2205.

The rime shows that bizeitt probably had ē. Orrm. has this noun in the form bizæte. In § 126, where the parallel form C bygate, bizate occurs, I have tried to give an explanation of the two forms as originating from ONorth. bizēat- and with shifting of stress bizeāt.

wreth inf. [OE wræþan] : breth s. 18221. Wyclif has the spelling breeth.

The rimes show that OE *æ*¹ = ē before th; but wreth inf. may also have a short e from the sb. wreth (see § 308) and perhaps breth s. too (cfr. Orrm. braþþe; see LAMBERTZ p. 58).

§ 308. OE *æ*¹ in self-rimes.

wreth s. [OE wræþo beside wræþþo] : leth s. [ONorth. læþo beside OE læþþo] 32, 12056. These rimes may equally well be taken as short rimes.

The rimes in the three last §§ prove that meth s. and adj. has $\bar{e}$ < ONorth. $\bar{a}$ < WGerm. $\bar{a}$. In E.E.Ps. meth s. is also rimed with eth adv. (see MÄTZNER Wörterb.) and in Castle off Love, a S. E.-Midland poem, too. Orm. always has $mæ\bar{p}$, seven instances in MÄTZNER. Note that the word is nowhere recorded riming with $\bar{e}$.

§ 317. The sb. wene = vapour?: bileue inf. 22927.

Judging from this single rime wene s. ought to have an open $\bar{e}$. STRATM.-BRADLEY considers that wene s. is connected in some way with OE wæfan < waibjan* = move. This stem wæf- is also found in OE wæfels. The Teut. stem waib-* occurs in Icel. veifa = 'move to and fro, brandish', OHG. weibon 'fluctuate'. Compare Lat. vapor with such words as Icel. vafra = waver, OE wafian. Perhaps the sb. wene is due to the verb wæfan, just as NE wave is due to the verb wave < OE wafian. A long open $\bar{e}$ in wēf s. is proved by a rime dēf adj. [OE deaf]: wēf 'The Debate of the body and the soul'.

KALUZA's suggestion in the Index of Names that C Antechim should be analysed as and Techim is probably wrong, as it would give no sense. This rime may equally well be taken as a short rime.

§ 336. OE i: ī.

(knaue)child: G wild pt. C wijld 11294. The spelling wijld is probably incorrect, ij is often miswritten for ī in MS. C, e. g. wits is always written »wijt».

When child was part of a compound word, the ī may have been shortened, but, on the other hand, the association with the simple word ought to have preserved the long ī.
The short ī of the plural childer may also have influenced the long ī of the singular. This rime may perhaps be correct, but nothing can be inferred from it, as it occurs only once. It should be noted that it was difficult to get a word riming with wilde pt.

§ 337. Such a rime as C unweild adj. = 'weak': child s. 10539, may perhaps be taken as a rime ī(ē): ī.
KALUZA has emended it to unwild: child, and the rime wild adj.: feild s. 6079, is perhaps an ī: ī(ē)-rime with OE ē shortened and becoming in Northern dialects some sort of i-sound (see northern examples of fild in NED and LUICK Stud. p. 194), although filde s. might possibly represent OE 3efilde; for these two rimes see LUICK, Unters. p. 232.

kind s. : strind s. 10161.
- From the spellings i and y nothing can be inferred. The only word with short i or i seems to be find, to judge from the rime in § 340. Orm. has, indeed, such a spelling as finn- desst, but only once, l. 16354, and it is considered a scribal error.

F thing s. C dughtithing : leng inf. 8181.

The rimes in this last § prove that the shortening of OE i had already taken place in this dialect.

bird s. [ONorth bird otherwise brid] : wird s. [OE wȳrd] 9968, G bird C brid : C wird s. G weird 20282.

§ 357. i + rd : e + rd.
bird s. : G werld C wird = werld 10077. This rime has been misinterpreted by EILERS, who gives OE wȳrd as the source of wird.

The last rime shows a short i in bird s. By the side of bird there occurs a form brid, as indicated by a few rimes; see §§ 64, 72.

-ist.

Cristes: evangelistes 21263.

Anticrist: warnist p. p. 22364.

Many of the above rimes prove that we have a short i in Christ. Christ is also found with short i in other ME texts; see MORSB. § 62 Note.

- § 359. OFr is + the preterite ending t.

baptist pt.: wiste pt. 19554.

The long i in the infinitive baptis seems to have been shortened in the preterite, where the combination s + t ought to have had a shortening influence.

: don p. p., bon, s. son 15816.

: son, bon, s. trone, mon s. 15604.

As to the etymology of the verb hon = 'delay' found only in the north, I should be inclined to derive it from the interjection ho = 'stop', from which a verb ho has been formed and is recorded in ME in the sense of 'cease, stop'. From this comes a sb. ho = 'cessation', occurring in such a phrase as withouten

ho. To ho inf. the infinitive ending -n has been added and taken as part of the stem, as was sometimes the case in the north; cfr. ron inf. and ro, mistrun inf. and mistru. It is true that resemblances in meaning and construction are found between ho and hon, but the vowel in ho is proved by rimes, e. g. in Chaucer, to be open, although a rime apparently containing close $\bar{o}$ does occur (see NED s. v. ho), and the above rimes all prove a close $\bar{o}$. One might perhaps imagine that $h\bar{o} < \text{OFr } ho$ was ousted in the north by $h\bar{o} < \text{OSc } h\acute{o}, h\acute{o}a$.

Note. The rimes G John, C Johan: bon s. 10965

: son adv. 13098 are incorrect, because, according to MORSB.

§ 135 A₄ Jon is always rimed with $\bar{e}$ in Midland and Southern.

The rime goddote (< God wūt): foṭ s. [OE fōt] 3730 is probably incorrect. The rimes don p. p.: on prep. 13856, 20214 are probably inaccurate, too.

§ 373. In the case of the rime host [OFr host] : cost [OSc kostr] = 'quality, manner', 8180, we must take into consideration the unsettled quality of the vowel before -st.. see MORSEB. § 61 and § 62 Note.

[OE fora] : more [OE māra] 20655 are very remarkable in such a typically northern text as the Cursor Mundi and, like rimes of the same kind in other northern writers, are to be looked upon as introduced from the south into the literary language of the north. These are the only examples of southern $\bar{q}$ in our poem, but, contrary to MORSEB. § 136 Note 2, they prove that the poem is not entirely free of southern $\bar{q}$ -rimes, as is stated there.

§ 375. The rime trone s. [OFr trone]: Iohn 13221 can be interpreted as a quite correct rime, as there were two pronunciations of trone [with $\bar{o}$ and $\bar{o}$], the latter representing an early loan. Iohn is always rimed with $\bar{o}$; see MORSB. § 145, Note 4,3.

§ 376. The rime cover [OFr cōvr-]: ouer prep. [OE ofer] 10119, thus a rime $\bar{o}$: $\bar{e}$, as LUICK considers, p. 232 Unters. The rime, however, is not quite incorrect, because the lengthened $\hat{o}$ (in ouer) is an $\bar{o}$ -sound intermediate between an open and a close $\bar{o}$ and is sometimes found riming with close $\bar{o}$; see MORSB. § 119.

§ 383. OE ó + rd : OE o + rþ.

word s. : G forth adv. [OE forþ] C fortd 11083. EILERS has overlooked this rime.

As EILERS p. 39 remarks, it is noteworthy that the author seems to avoid riming OE and OFr words with each other. It is also to be taken into consideration that there was a dearth of rime-words ending in -ort and -orth, and consequently emergency rimes are to be expected. Yet the rimes in the last two paragraphs seem to imply a short o, at least in word s.

§ 387. OE ó + rn riming with the p. p. be-storn.

corn s. : C be-storn p. p. [< be + OE storfen p. p. of the verb sterfan] = been put to death (by starvation) 4736. FGT has the reading for-lorn, which the Notes prefer to that of C. Of C be-storn = bestorn it is stated in the Notes that it is the only instance of this compound of sterve met with in ME. Yet just because of its rare occurrence in ME. and perhaps because of its absence in the dialects of the scribes, the word was very apt to be replaced by another and more familiar one, as e. g. forlorn. Moreover, the fact that MSS. FG have different readings, F: »or hungre haue zou alle for-lorne«, G: »Ar 3e for hunger be for-lorn« seems to support my suggestion.

- § 388. The verb biscorn [of doubtful origin]: born p. p. 12232. I agree with the Notes in preferring G's reading, but without the emendation of i into me. In the G reading: »Bot i, caitef, nu all bischorn« we only need to correct the spelling bischorn into bi-scorn, which is the spelling in C. In the G text nu all bischorn represents a relative clause with the pronoun omitted, as was very often the case. The verb biscorn is recorded in ME in C. M. l. 16611 and Chaucer, Pers. T. 204.

Summary. The rimes with beforn adv. [OE beforan] in §§ 385, 386 prove a short o even in the words containing OE ó + m, or else they would be incorrect rimes $\bar{o} : \bar{o}$, or $\bar{o} : \bar{o}$. The rime with bestorn p. p. in § 387, if correct, would also speak in favour of $\bar{o}$.

§ 408. AN u + mb(re) in self-rime.

umber s. [AN umbre]: cumber inf. [AN (en)cumbrex] 8017.

From this single rime nothing can be inferred as to the quantity of the vowel. EILERS has overlooked this case when he says, p. 15: Im Cursor Mundi kommt ein Reim auf -mb nicht vor. On p. 80 he gives, however, such a rime as comber inf.: noumber from Roberd of Brunne.

The u in stund p. p. is probably short, so grund s., which is rimed with it, most likely has short u. The other words are uncertain. stund s. has a parallel form stunt, with a decidedly short vowel; see § 110, and this fact perhaps proves a short u in stund s. too. Cfr. Barb.  means 'flinch, hesitate', suits the context much better. In that case what EILERS says in the NED s. v. fraist, where an example of fraist = 'ask' is recorded from The Destruction of Troy 97: «Ffrayne will I fer and fraist of pere werkes». This meaning 'ask about' or 'for' is cognate with that of 'seek for, desire', recorded in NED, and suits this context very well, as it implies the uncertainty of the wicked as to their freedom as opposed to the certainty of the good.

C wai G quili ought to be emended to wei: drei, slei, hei 16994.

C a-wai riming with ei = 'eye' 13545 should also be emended to a wei; G offers a better reading with a-wei, where only the hyphen ought to be removed. Both Notes and Glossary are wrong in rendering a-wai as = 'away'. In this case there would have been an incorrect rime ai: ēi. a wei in this passage means 'a bit'; compare the above examples, where wei has the more specific sense of 'a bit of time', 'a short space of time'. wei had another special signification of 'a short distance'; see The Century Dictionary s. v. wee. As to the etymology of wei SKEAT assumes a borrowing from OSc vegr = 'way', but I think that this derivation is impossible, as the OSc combination -eg is represented in ME by -ai (see § 430), and all the above rimes point to ēi.

§ 466. The preterite throu: drou pt. [OE drōh, drōȝon] 24317.

This rime proves that throu pt. contains $\bar{o}u$ and accordingly belongs to class VI of the strong verbs. The infinitive would in that case have a form thrau, but no corresponding infinitive form is found in OE with the sense of 'agonize', which would give a correct rendering here. A new formation in ME is thus probable, but a verb thrau (or throw in Southern) is not recorded earlier than 1513

(see NED s. v. throw v.¹ B. I, 2: «Quotations 1513, a 1650 appear to have the specific meaning 'to writhe in death-throes' and may perhaps be viewed as showing a Scotch form of throe v. 2», q. v. = 'suffer throes, agonize', just the sense suitable to this context). Our throu would then be the first example of throe v. = 'agonize'. The verb, whose infinitive was trau in the north, passed into class VI of the strong verbs and so obtained a preterite form throu, containing ou. The Glossary erroneously renders throu with 'threw', but that would give no sense at all.

- § 467. The rime clous s. pl. [OE clōzas] 17590: Iuus [OFr Giu] is to be interpreted as a rime iuu: iu. This rime is therefore very instructive and worthy of attention, as it proves that OE ō had passed into an iu-sound even before 1300. LUICK in his Studien p. 127 speaks about this Northumbrian modification of OE ō: «Die Veränderung dieses Lautes tritt uns aber schon in Reimen des 14. Jahrhunderts entgegen, muss also um diese Zeit schon deutlich ins Ohr gefallen und schon vor 1300 eingetreten sein» and a few lines below «die northumbrische Modification des ō muss vor 1300 liegen, wenigstens in seinen Anfängen». LUICK does not, however, give any real proof of his statement about the modified sound. That ō, at any rate, was already modified into an iu-sound is shown by the above rime, which cannot possibly be accounted for in any other way.

Etymological Section.

air s. occurs only once, in line 8971, riming with fair adj. The complete line is as follows: «And hamward sco tok hir air». The Glossary renders this word air correctly with 'way'. The word is, however, not given in NED in this sense. air is an OFr loan-word, coming from OFr eire, or in a contracted form erre, which meant 'journey, way'. The phrase in question «sco tok hir air» had its exact equivalent in the following OFr expression found in Wace «leur erre ont vers France priz», where erre means «way»; see GODEFROY s. v. erre = 'voyage, route, chemin'. NED mentions this word in the form eyre q. v. only with the sense of 'itineration, circuit' as a term of jurisprudence, but not in the above general sense of 'journey, route, way'.

bef occurs as pt. in ll. 14730, 24871 riming with (bi)left pt., 24840 riming with wef pt. and as p. p. in l. 2264 riming with left pt.; see § 54. Acc. to NED the verb is found only in pt. and p. p. NED assumes as possible a derivation from OE behaftian* with loss of -h-, but that would have given a ME form baft(en) with a and not e. As bef occurs mostly as a preterite without any corresponding infinitive, one is inclined to interpret it as a specific preterite formation and thus to connect it with such irregular preterite forms as OE hēht, leolc etc., i. e. reduplicated preterites. In OE and just in ONorth. a form (hondum) beóftun actually existed; see BOSWORTH-TOLLER Suppl. I s. v. beaftan. beóftun is glossed with 'lamentabantur' i. e. 'beat with the hands as an expression of grief'. The word here in C. M. means exactly 'beat'. I look upon this ONorth bœoft as a reduplicated preterite from the OE infinitive bēatan, accordingly a pret. form parallel to OE bēot. bœoft pt. was developed from a Teutonic ground-form bēbaut*, reduplicated pret. of the inf. bāutan* —, formed in the same way as, e. g., in Gothic staistaut pt. to stantan inf. This irregular pret. bœoft > bēft is found in OE as well as in ME times only in the North, and this supports the above suggestion, since such irregular reduplicated preterites were peculiar to the Anglian and especially the Northumbrian dialects; see SIEVERS § 394, 1, Note 2. Being apprehended as a weak preterite form, the pret. bēft was transferred to the p. p. by analogy.

blēs s. occurs riming with rēs (see 274) and with vintrēs (see § 275). As I have stated in § 274 I assume as the origin of the open ē or rather half-open ē (compare MORSB. § 111) an OE e which has been lengthened in an open syllable. NED gives an entirely wrong explanation of bles by deriving it from OE blāse, which would be represented, however, in ME by a form with a and not e. The ME form would then have been blāse, and this was the usual form, especially in the south. EDD, on the other hand, considers an OE form blāse* < blaisjōn* (see § 43 in the Phonology) as its source. But in that case I am unable to connect the stem blais-* with any words in the cognate languages. Assuming that the above rimings are correct, then in order to satisfy the conditions present, we must postulate an OE blese* s. with short e in open syllable. This OE blese* originated from WGerm. blasiz*, accordingly an i-stem with the same root blas-* as is found in OE blāse < blasjōn. blasiz* has many representatives in other Germanic languages, such as MLG bles, Du. bles, Sw. bläs, all meaning 'a white spot on the forehead of a horse or cow'. Originally it meant 'something white, shining'. The stem blas-* is found in MHG in the meaning of 'torch' and in OHG in compounds such as blas-ros, in MHG blasen-hengst. All these words are clearly connected with each other, and perhaps the English blaze = 'flame' and blaze = 'white spot' are one and the same native word, though the latter does not seem to be recorded till the 17th century.

bulk inf. is recorded only once riming with skulk inf. 18511. It seems to mean 'beat' in the phrase concerned «Apon þair breistes can (F gon) þai bulk». NED says about this word: «origin unknown. ?To beat». EDD gives two verbs bulk, one with the sense of = 'to butt, push with the horns', the other = 'throb, palpitate'. These two verbs are probably connected with this ME verb bulk = 'beat' and are originally from the same OE verb bulcian* because of the resemblances both in form and signification. A word very similar in form and with the same meaning 'butt' is NE (dial.) bult corresponding with the Sw. bulta; cfr. TAMM, Etym. Svensk Ordbok, where a connection with such words as buller = 'noise', bullra = 'make a noise' is stated as possible.² It is, indeed, very tempting to assume such a relation when one compares such words clearly cognate with each other as Sw. dunka = 'beat', ME dunch = strike, OSc dynkr 'stroke' and 'noise', originating from dun-k-*; cfr OSc dynr = 'noise', OE dynian = 'make a noise', and with t OE dynt = 'stroke, blow', OSc dyntr = 'noise, din'.

drill v. is found riming with spill inf. 23716 and: will, fulfill, ill, till 16390. Consequently it contains short i. NED says of this verb: »origin unknown« The meaning of the verb in C. M., is stated by NED to be 'delay, put off'. The English dialect verb droll rendered in EDD by 'delay, procrastinate', seems to be connected with this verb drill, at least as far as the meaning is concerned.

In the cognate continental languages we find e. g. OFris. drölen = linger, Du. druile = linger. We find more resemblances in the Scandinavian languages, e. g. OSc drolla = be slow, drollsamr = slow, Norw. Dial. drûl, drÿl q. v. in TORP, Nynorsk Etym. Ordbok. Further connections in Swedish dialects are seen in RIETZ s. v. drula = 'linger, delay'. The verb drylt in a Swed. dialect meaning 'to be slow in action' is another example. All these words point to a common Germ. root drûll(l)-* and from that a PrimOE formation drulljan* may have been developed and been represented in OE by dryllan*, which I assume as the possible OE ground-form for ME drill = 'delay'.

siquar sb. = 'time, moment' occurs frequently in rimes; see § 127. NED gives no information about its origin but offers an interesting parallel form from The Scotch Legendary Saints sythware and a form without -w- sithar. As the spelling qu represents OE hw we may combine these two different forms into a form siphwar, and by adding a final -f an OE ground-form siphw(e)arf* may be constructed and analysed as consisting of the two existing OE nouns sip = 'going, journey', and hw(e)arf = 'turn', related to the verb hwearfian = 'turn, move'. The formation siphw(e)arf* would in that case have the sense 'turn in going'; compare Swed. gångvarv. As a matter of fact, there existed in OE such compounds with sip + an ablaut-grade of a verb implying same sort of action. There are e. g. OE sipfær = 'way, journey' and sip-fæt = 'journey', which also has a meaning very relevant in this connection, 'course of time'; see BOSWORTH-TOLLER s. v. sipfæt. In Swedish there are a great many corresponding words and compounds implying 'course of time'; I need only mention tidevarv = 'age', and varv, veva, vända = 'turn' in such phrases as i den vevan, i den vändan = 'at that turn', 'at that juncture', tre varv om midjan = 'three times about the waist'. In English too, turn may contain an idea of time. As to the dropping of the final -f in OE siph-*

hw(e)arf this phenomenon has taken place in unstressed positions, and a parallel case is observed in the frequently unstressed OE auxiliary þ(e)arf > ME þar, present form of OE þurfan*; see NED s. v. tharf. A similar simplifying of a consonant group is seen in the case of another auxiliary OE d(e)arr > ME darr > dar (in an unstressed position); see § 118. With regard to the consonant group — þhw — such an accumulation of three consonants being of course very troublesome to pronounce, some modification of it had to take place and the most natural result would be the dropping of the medial consonant, which, indeed, occurred in the dialect found in The Scotch Legendary Saints, where OE siþhwarf* became sithwar, as is seen in the above example. In the dialect of Cursor Mundi the first consonant, th, seems to have dropped and the form sihwar, which always appears in C. M. as siquar, is developed.

skurn appears as a verb = 'flinch, hesitate', riming with murn inf. 23337, 24423 and turn s. 19445 and as a sb. [formed from the verb] = 'hesitation', riming with burn s. 8963; see further §§ 420, 421. NED only says about these words: «obscure origin; perh. cognate with ON skirra-sk. Cf. scunner v.», but entirely omits to mention its southern representative skurn = 'avoid, shun'; see NED shurn, where the following statement occurs: «Altered form of scurn v.» Owing to the existence of the southern sh any idea of directly connecting skurn with a Scandinavian form with sk is probably to be dismissed. It is very tempting to connect this word with scunner = 'flinch', but there is no southern variant of the latter with sh. Modern forms of scunner in Scottish dialects still contain sk, and in the southern counties of Scotland forms with sk- instead of sh- are not at all rare; for examples see J. MURRAY: The Dialect of the Southern Counties of Scotland, p. 122. The suffix in scunner is, according to NED, apparently the frequentative suffix -er, and the dictionary suggests a connection with shun < OE scunian. The ME skurn would then be represented in OE by the form scunrian*, a frequentative verb. By metathesis of nr an OE form skurnian* may have been developed. With this metathesis of nr compare the metathesis of ns in OE clænsian, by metathesis clæsmian; see BÜLBR. § 523.

sogh s. occurs riming with slogh pt. 2501, where it has the meaning 'muddy place, slough'. Apart from this it also means 'ditch, drain', and NED compares it with a word zoeg = 'small ditch in a meadow' in Antwerp. dial., but its origin is stated by the dictionary to be obscure. By the side of sogh NED records such forms as swowze, swough which are noteworthy, as they show that a w has been dropped before o. MAŘIK, p. 15, indeed, places this word sogh under the heading Cons. + w + OE ō̄ and with regard to the loss of w (p. 84) he states: «Der früheste Schwund eines w vor ME ō ist um 1300 verzeichnet.» As the Cursor Mundi is supposed to have been composed just before 1300 it is possible that a loss of w had taken place in the dialect of the author. In that case we should obtain a possible OE ground-form swō̄z*, swō̄h*. I think I have succeeded in finding cognates to OE swō̄z* in the Scandinavian languages, e. g. Jutlandish svau = 'quagmire' and Sw. dial. svag = 'depression in a field, swampy place'; see further TORP Nynorsk Ordbok s. v. svaga and RIETZ s. v. svag. The meanings of all these words correspond very well with that of English sogh. The Antwerp. dial. zoeg, given by NED, seems to contain ō, but the dictionary has rendered it inadequately. According to CORNELISSEN-VERVLIET the form is really zō̄g, which implies a short vowel, and Flem. oē represents WGerm. ū. A WGerm. form sug-* may very well have been developed from an older form swug-*, as w before u was dropped in Teutonic. The ō of the English form represents the lengthened ablaut-grade of the a that occurs in the Scandinavian forms.

steck inf., only recorded in MSS. EFG l. 22202, riming with breck inf.; see § 183. No dictionary, as far as I have seen, mentions this verb steck, which in this passage seems to have the meaning 'run away, take to flight'. A verb with precisely this meaning 'take to flight' is found in OIcel. in the form stökkva; see CLEASBY and FRITZNER. For the loss of v compare such OwSc words as slökkva, and gørva, but ME steck may equally well be derived from the present tense sing. OIcel. stekkr. In the first period of the Scandinavian loanwords, however, stökkva appeared in a form with -nk-, and generally the Scand. loan-words have retained these older unassimilated forms; see BJÖRKMAN Prov. p. 6 foot-note 1. Yet in a few cases forms with kk < nk, thus representing a younger layer of loans from OScand, appear, as is shown in BJÖRKMAN Loanwords p. 169 and BJÖRKMAN Prov. p. 6 foot-note 1. A derivation of ME steck from OwSc seems therefore possible.

stime sb. occurs riming with time sb. 19651, 22514, and is thus proved by these two rimes to contain a long i. The Century Dict. supposes stime s. to be a variant of steem, stem (see Cent. Dict. steam) or perhaps a variant of shim < OE scima. The Glossary translates it with 'ray of light', but as it is only used here in such negative senses as «he ne moght se a stime», I prefer the rendering 'glimpse' or 'bit, particle', cfr. EDD s. v. stime I. sb. Although it seems very tempting to connect stime with such a word as Sw. (till)stymmelse, it is hardly probable, as Sw. stymmelse seems to be connected with Sw. stomme = 'figure, shape' and in that case there is no connection in meaning apparent. The other meanings of stime recorded in EDD should be noted, e. g. 'to open the eyes partially, peer' and the adj. stimey = 'dim-sighted'. In Swed. the sb. 'glimpse' is rendered by skymt, also meaning 'faint light', and the verb by skymta, and they are related to the adj. skum = half bright and the sb. skymning = 'dawn, half-light'. The chief sense of the root skum-* seems to be 'limitation of light'. This notion of 'limiting, checking' in a general sense is found associated with another root in Germ. languages stam*, stum*, represented by the verbs stämma in Scand., stemmen = check in G., stumm in G., q. v. in KLUGE, stumm sein, originally = 'to have a stoppage in one's speech' and stum in the lengthened ablaut-grade, stām-* found in G. ungestüm adj. originally = 'not to be checked'; see KLUGE. Just as stum* has got its specified meaning of 'stopping in speech', stām-* may have obtained the sense of limitation in another specific direction = 'diminishing the power of vision', as seen in Engl. Dial. stīme = 'peer with the eyes', and the adj. stīmey = 'dim-sighted'. If this hypothesis is right, we may have had in OE a form stȳm* < stāmi-*. stīme = glimpse would then originally mean 'the dim view one gets of an object'.

sualm s. occurs only in MSS. C and G, riming with palm 20758. suelm, a probable ablaut-form of this s. sualm, is recorded in The alliterative Romance of Alexander 750 and in Early English Alliterative Poems III, 3 with the sense of 'heat, glow'; see swelm* sb. in STRATMANN-BRADLEY. In the passage in C. M. it seems to imply some kind of illness. The Glossary translates it with 'sickness'. MLG. has swalm = 'qualm' and ODan. svalm = 'smoke', but in ODan. it also has the meaning 'attack of illness'. In Dan. and Scanian dialects (see FEILBERG and RIETZ) svalm means 'suffocating heat in a room', 'warm steam', 'lukewarm wind'. sualm is further probably connected with G. schwül q. v. in KLUGE = 'sultry', OE swelan, swēlan = 'burn' and OE swōl s. = 'feverish heat'. For further connections see TORP Nyuorsk Et. Wb. s. v. svæla. An idea of 'heat, especially in motion', seems to be common to all these probably related words. Especially the OE swōl = 'feverish heat' leads one to think that 'fever' might be the most probable signification of this ME sualm, as it seems, to judge by the context »Ga to þaa men þat lijs in sualm and þai sal both hef hel and witt» to imply some sort of illness. The meaning 'fever' would, I think, suit very well here, as in the last part of the text given above witt s. is mentioned, and, as is well-known, in the case of a feverish disease even the 'wits' are sometimes temporarily lost.

utenem adj. riming with strēm 4827 and utenemes : strēmes 1315 (see § 209) are by these rimes certainly proved to contain ē. They mean 'exceptional' and the original sense is seen by a parallel word utnume(n), also meaning 'exceptional, exquisite'. A meaning 'taken out' or 'worth being taken out' seems to be the original one. utenem cannot represent the lengthened ablaut-grade of OE niman = 'take'. A WGerm nāmi-* would give OE nēm- and ME nēm with close ē. We may, however, find the origin of this -nēm in OSc -nēmr. -nēmr was a very common form, from which adjectives could be composed usually by adding an adverb, e. g. auð-nēmr, śótt-nēmr, tór-nēmr, ú-nēmr, upp-nēmr. Some of these compounds, indeed, had a passive sense, i. e. denoting that something could be taken e. g. upp-nēmr = 'seizable', auð-nēmr = 'easily learned', śótt-nēmr = 'apt to be taken ill'; see CLEASBY.

wer(e) sb. = 'doubt' is proved by a great many rimes to contain a close ē; see § 255. wer(e) has nothing to do with OSc vari = 'caution' or OE wær = 'aware' nor with the OE verb werian, as CURTIS in Anglia XVII p. 13 thinks possible. I connect this wēr(e) with an unrecorded OE wēr-* < wār-* < wōri-*. The stem wōri- is represented in Scand. by ør = 'giddy, confounded'; see FALK u. TORP Et. Wb. s. v. ør. In OE there existed a closely related form in the verb wōrian = 'wander about', which was also used in a figurative sense = 'vacillare, dubitare, anxiare', and these last significations correspond exactly with the meanings of the ME wēr(e) = 'doubt, fear'. In Roberd of Brunne's Chronicle 2126 wēr occurs with the meaning of 'confusion', and this resembles very closely the sense of the Scand. word given above.
